TACOMA, Wash. (Oct. 30, 2019) – “Power in the Hands of a Few” is a fitting slogan when referencing one of the country’s leading bespoke auto manufacturers, Saleen Automotive, which will be featuring 17 of its iconic sports cars at America’s Car Museum (ACM) within a unique display that details the brand’s rich 35-year history, starting November 16.

Steve Saleen, a race car driver turned specialized vehicle manufacturer, started modifying Ford Mustangs in 1984 for higher performance. The brand went on several decades later to produce America’s first supercar – the Saleen S7 – which proved itself as a world-class performance car, setting records on legendary tracks such as Nürburgring, Daytona, Silverstone and more.

“Having Steve’s collection showcase at the museum is a really amazing opportunity for us,” stated ACM Curator of Exhibits Scot Keller. “Saleen is one of the most exciting figures in the industry, and we’re delighted that ACM gets the exclusive opportunity to share his story.”

Activities at ACM will include an opportunity to meet Steve Saleen over coffee provided by ANTHEM coffee and donuts by Original House of Donuts (Caffeine and Gasoline). Attendees of the meet-and-greet will also be invited to walk the latest exhibit of legacy racing and road vehicles from the Saleen collection.

“This is more than a chance for the community to get up close to some of the most extraordinary cars in the world,” said ACM CEO Jennifer Maher. “This is also an opportunity for young people to see that there’s a clear career path in automotive technology and people like Steve Saleen are the role models.”

In addition to multiple generations of Mustangs, Saleen’s famous S7 and the mid-engine Saleen 1 will be on display in the exhibit. Visitors of the exhibit can witness up-close the notorious manufacturing and engineering behind these supercars.
